PREFACE.

PREFACE.

THE present volume includes the extant rolls of Exchequer for the fourteen years from 1543 to 1556, together with the entries for the same period in the Responde Books and in the Rentals of Crown Lands. The Rentals of these years consist merely of a few inconsiderable additions to the older list of tenants and holdings. The Responde Books for the years from 1543 to 1545 are wholly lost, although an indication of their contents remains in the entries from the Index in Libros Responsionum, printed in the Appendix. The respondes for the years from 1545 to 1550 remain, not in the usual form of an extended record, but in a book, the entries in which show so many interlineations, corrections, and transpositions as to make it certain that it was only a draft. For the rest of the years covered by this volume (with the exception of a brief period, the entries for which are supplied from the draft) the Responde Books are preserved in extenso.

I.

The series of rolls for these years is far from complete. Two of the rolls, those containing the comptroller's accounts for 1550 and 1555,[1] have been wasted by natural decay, and exist only as fragments. Some of the rolls, too, have been lost. To speak generally, the rolls for any given period should include a comptroller's account, an account of ballivi ad extra, and an account of custumars and bailies of burghs for each year. By this reckoning, fourteen years—the scope of the present volume—would yield forty-two rolls; while the number of rolls that actually remain to represent the period is only twenty-eight.

The evidence of the rolls themselves makes it clear that this deficit is in some measure to be ascribed to the loss of accounts that once existed. Thus, an account of David Wood of Craig as comptroller is referred to in the extant rolls as having been rendered on 30th March 1543;[2] and there are similar references to comptroller's accounts rendered in 1546 and in 1552[3] by William, commendator of Culross. Another account was in all probability rendered by this comptroller before his successor took office on 24th April 1555.[4] Yet none of these accounts is now to be found among the rolls; and only three comptrollers' accounts in all, two of them fragments, remain for the whole of the fourteen years covered by this volume. Only in one of these, that for 1543,[5] does the usual list of lords auditors for the year occur. It is possible, however, to trace from the other rolls the full succession of comptrollers during all this time. The office was held in 1543 by David Wood of Craig, who, as already noted, gave in an account, now lost, for that year; and who is alluded to in other accounts as a former comptroller.[1] He was succeeded in the same year by Thomas Menzies of Pitfodels, who rendered the extant account for 1543,[2] and appears to have acted only for five months. The comptroller for the years from 1544 to 1554 was William, commendator of Culross, who took payment of the dues referable to Martinmas in the last-mentioned year. He was succeeded by the Frenchman, Bartholomew de Vilemore, who took payment of the dues referable to the following Whitsunday, and continued to act throughout the remaining years of this volume. The historian Burton, in commenting upon the French influence which the regency of Mary of Guise introduced into Scotland, says:—"On the list of comptrollers of the Exchequer there appears the name of the famous De Roubay, and, as his successor, Bartholomew Vilemore."[3] Burton does not give any authority for this statement, and the fact that the accounts, while preserving the names of a complete series of comptrollers, do not mention De Roubay, would seem to prove that his statement is erroneous.[4]

Incomplete as the series of preserved rolls is, however, it would be improper to suppose that the comparative smallness of the number of accounts included in this volume is to be ascribed wholly to loss or decay. The preserved rolls of accounts of ballivi ad extra and of custumars and bailies of burghs appear to contain all the accounts that were rendered. If these are fewer in number and less regularly given in than usual, this is because the business of Exchequer was impeded and disturbed by the prevalence of war.

When King James V. died in 1542, he left the constitution of the country so well established, indeed, that the machinery of government went on without noticeable check. But there was war with the old enemies of England; and hostilities, now more active, now more relaxed, raged continuously for nine years. One effect of the presence of the enemy in Scotland was so far to unsettle the fiscal business of the country that receipts and payments usually accounted for every year were suffered to accumulate for long periods. Instances of such falling into arrear are common in the rolls of ballivi ad extra and of custumars and bailies of burghs down to 1553: for instance, the fermes of Dunbar were not accounted for in Exchequer for eleven years from 1542;[1] those of Cullard lay over for six years from 1547 to 1553;[2] while the bailies of Lauder gave in no account from 1547 to 1552[3]; and the account of the customs of

Wigtown and Whithorn ran on for nine years from 1543.[1] Then the fragmentary roll containing the comptroller's account for 1550[2] covers, in all the discharge entries, and in one item of the charge, the years 1546, 1547, 1548, and 1549; from which fact it seems reasonable to infer that no comptroller's account was rendered in these years. The Earl of Arran, as Lord Governor or regent from 1542 to 1554, was responsible to the Crown for the administration of the Crown revenues during his period of office. Yet no particulars are to be gathered from the discharge and exoneration granted to him on the transfer of the regency to Mary of Guise, and signed by the young Queen Mary at Meudon, near Paris, on 22nd March 1553–4. The sum and substance of that document is, that the Lord Governor had expended the whole of the revenues in the conduct of the war.[3]

Nor was it only by lessening their number that the war left its mark upon the accounts. Thus, there appears in the comptroller's account for 1543 a note of so unusual a payment as that made to a certain burgess of Aberdeen to enable him to proceed to Denmark and purchase £200 worth of gunpowder.[4] Then the bailies of Jedburgh are in 1551 allowed a remission of quintuple the sum of the annual fermes of the burgh, in respect that "the said burgh had been burned down by the old enemies of England, and

[1] Page 171.
[2] Page 139.
[3] See the Discharge and the Act of Exoneration following thereon, in Thomson's Acts, ii. 60.

had been held and laid waste by them for the space of five years."[1] A similar remission of two years' fermes was granted in 1552 to the bailies of Lauder, because the town had been in the hands of the English for that time.[2] Dunbar was a place of strength; so the chamberlain gave in no account for eleven years prior to 1553, and then had to report that the lands of Lochend, as well as some other productive holdings in the lordship, had for four years been ravaged by the same inveterate foes, and in this way paid no ferme.[3] Then, in 1554, the custumar of Newhaven of Preston has to be allowed a remission of five years' rent of the customs, "because no goods had paid custom at the said port during the said period; but the harbours had been rendered unproductive by reason of the English invasion at Haddington, and by their remaining in that neighbourhood.[4]

This occupation of Haddington was one of the outstanding incidents of the war, and the most conspicuous event in the history of the burgh. The records have some other references to it to supplement the ordinary accounts. After the battle of Pinkie (an event to be afterwards more particularly referred to, as illustrated by the entries in the records), the English, in April 1548, marched to Haddington and seized the town. They held it until October 1549, when the protracted siege, conducted by the Scots under the French general, the Sieur d'Essé, ended in its evacuation. Accordingly, when the bailies came in 1550 to render their usual account—the first they had sent in for five years—they had to be allowed a remission of the three terms' payments of the burgh maills, "because the English inhabited the said burgh and intromitted with the said fermes" for that period.[1] In the draft Responde Book already mentioned there is preserved a memorandum of a commission of justiciary which seems to show that, at the outset of the siege, the leaders of the Scots, exasperated, it may be, by the failure of their first efforts to retake the town from the English, made unusual and unpopular levies wherewith to maintain the investment. It is dated 20th July 1548, and empowers Archibald Hamilton of Roploch to apprehend and punish all persons dwelling within the barony of Lesmahago, "who had remained at home and absented themselves from the army assembled for the siege of Haddington, or who had departed from the army before the expiry of the diet.[2]

But the chief event of the war, and of the period under consideration, was the battle of Pinkie, fought on 10th September 1547. The entries in the draft Responde Book applicable to the two subsequent years refer so frequently to the battle that it is possible to make up from them a list of names to serve as the nucleus of a roll of landholders killed at Pinkie. The Scots array had been assembled by the Lord Governor at Musselburgh. On the 8th of September, two days before the battle, he was himself at Monkton-hall, a hamlet about a mile away. In order to encourage his soldiers, he there promulgated a statute conferring privileges and special exemptions upon the heirs of those who, by the chance of war, were destined to fall in the anticipated conflict. The act proceeds upon the preamble that "the haill body of the realme is passand forward at this tyme to resist our auld inemies of Ingland now cuming in this realme to invaid the samyn"; and confers its benefits on "quhatsumevir persoun or persounis that happynis to be slane, hurt to deid, or takis seiknes in our soverane lady's army . . . . and deis in the said seiknes, gangand, remanand, or cumand therfra." It goes on to enact that the heir of a landholder dying as mentioned, provided he enter to his lands within three terms after the death of his ancestor, shall be relieved of the payment of the feudal casualties that would have been exigible had his predecessor died in any other way. Heirs in minority were to have their minority dispensed with. Those of persons holding feus were to be entered without payment of the ordinary duplicand. In like manner, the usual grassums and "entry silver" were not to be exacted for five years from the wives, children, executors, or assignees of tacksmen, rentallers, and others dying in the fight; and the presentation and collation of spiritual benefices rendered vacant by the death, in battle, of churchmen, were to pass to their nearest of kin.[1]

It is in consequence of the application of the provisions of this act to the particular cases falling under it that the names of persons slain at Pinkie appear in the draft Responde Book. The respondes are memoranda made by the director of chancery in sending precepts to the sheriffs, ordering them to give sasine of lands retoured in chancery. They contain, along with a note of the name of the lands, the landholder, the date of the precept, and the amount of the casualties exigible, a statement of the nature and extent of the feudal charge under which the dues fell, as ward, non-entry, or relief.[2] Deaths falling under the act made at Monktonhall affected the amount of the casualties payable by the heirs of landholders thus deceased; and so these landholders come to be referred to in the respondes, either by name or (as is more usual) by some less specific description: The entries note, in general, that sasine of lands was granted to such a one, "whose father died in the fight at Pinkiecleugh." Sometimes the kinship of the ancestor with the heir is not so definitely put, the responde stating merely that sasine was granted to such a one,

"his minority being dispensed with by the act made at Monktonhall."

Before proceeding to enumerate the names found in these entries, it is proper to point out that four distinct places are mentioned as the scenes of the deaths referred to — Sandyriggs, Inveresk, Falside, and Pinkiecleugh. It is known from other sources[1] that on the next day after the act of Monktonhall was promulgated, that is to say, on 9th September 1547, the Scots engaged the enemy at Falside hill, and the English advanced to Inveresk. It was not until the following day, the 10th, that the decisive battle took place at Pinkie. In one entry in the Responde Book, however, the fight at Falside is said to have occurred on the 10th, instead of the 9th;[2] so that its references to the various places of death should not be read as exact. Here, then, is the list of names, with a note of the place mentioned in each case[3]:—

This list might be added to from the Chancery Records of Retours. It illustrates the historical value of the Responde Books as supplementing those records, or as supplying the place of such of them as are lost.

II.

A further trace of the disturbed state of the country during these years is to be seen in the unusually large number of memoranda of commissions of justiciary interspersed among the respondes. Besides the commissions issued for the punishment of such ordinary crimes as theft and robbery, there is one granted to a ship-captain to punish piracy;[1] and several are directed against poachers or "killers of deer,[2] killers of red fish,[3] and "persons shooting with a

culverin at deer or wild birds, fishing in lochs and ponds, breaking into dove-cots, gardens, or orchards, stealing partridges, taking birds, or cutting green-wood."[1] There is also one to suppress the offence of "being infected with the plague, or of being delinquent in the duty of curing persons so affected."[2]

Two of these commissions are especially noteworthy as bearing on the date of an occurrence not otherwise settled—the storming of the castle of Borwe in Sutherlandshire. This enterprise was the main incident in a prolonged and intermittent feud between the Earl of Sutherland and Y Mackay of Strathnaver. Taking advantage of the absence of the Earl in France in 1551, Mackay had raided Sutherland, and maintained the conflict with the Earl's brother and representative, with the result that, when Mary of Guise became regent, he was summoned to appear before her in eyre at Inverness to answer to a charge of rebellion. The rest of the story is best told in the words of its chief authority, Sir Robert Gordon's "Genealogical History of the Earldom of Sutherland."[3] "Y Mackay of Far, being summoned at this time to compear before the queen at Inverness (for that he had spoiled and molested the cuntry of Southerland, during Earle John his absence in France) did contemne the summonds and precept of warning, whereupon the queen granted a commission to John Earle of Southerlande against Y Mackie and his cuntrey. So Earle John, assembling all his forces, entered into Strathnaver, sacking and spoiling befor him in all hostile maner, and possessed all the places of doubt, least (as sayeth Holinshed [1]) any hole might be left for them to pass away from thence. Bot when Earle John perceaved that Y Mackie wold not abyde and feight him, he beseidged the strong castle and fort called Borwe, the principal strenth of that cuntrey, not two miles distant from Far. After a short seidge, he took it by force, and hanged Rorie Mack-ean-voyre, captain thereof. This fort was demolished by Earle John, the year of God one thousand fyve hundred fyftie-six." The editor of Sir Robert Gordon's history notes that the MS. which he printed bore the date "threttie-six" instead of "fyftie-six" in this place; but another MS. of the history, dated 1630, and preserved in the Advocates' Library, has "1556." [2] Possibly this MS. supplied the correction. The author of the Origines Parochiales Scotiæ has followed Gordon, and sets the date of the occurrence in 1556.[3]

But two commissions (one of which may be that mentioned by Sir Robert) are noted in the draft Responde Book. The earliest of these is dated 17th August 1554, at Edinburgh, and [1] It is worth noting that Holinshed (ed. 1577, p. 482) dates the regent's progress on justice-ayres as made in 1556. See also Pitcairn, Criminal Trials, I. 389.*

EDINBURGH: PRINTED FOR HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE
BY NEILL AND COMPANY.

empowers Sir Hugh Kennedy of Girvane Mains to try "all persons within the dioceses of Ross and Caithness, as well in town as in country, who have assisted, supported, or participated in the crimes of Y M'Ky, the rebel."[1] The other is dated 4th October 1554, and empowers John, Earl of Sutherland, and Sir Hugh Kennedy, conjunctly and severally, to "punish each and every person who delayed or stayed away from the army at the siege of the house of Boirrow." These documents make 1554 the more probable date to assign for the destruction of the castle.

III.

The volume in which the notes of the commissions are preserved is, as has been remarked, a draft. As such it has upon its margins and fly-leaves an occasional jotting, made by the scribe, perhaps with the object of trying his pen, perhaps as a diversion from the monotonous employment of writing out stereotyped phrases of Charter Latin. These graffiti are not, indeed, matters of record; but they are interesting as illustrating the clerical characteristics of the life of the time in which they were written. They may be compared with those given in a prior volume.[2] Two of them are texts from the Vulgate (Prov. 11, 14;

[1] Infra, p. 572.

[2] See Exchequer Rolls, vol xv. pp. lxxiii, lxxiv.

and Ecclus. 30, 24), such as one might expect to drop from the pen of a musing ecclesiastic :—

"Ubi multa consilia, ibi salus."[1] and

"Zelus et iracundia minuunt dies, et ante tempus cogitatus adducit senectam."[2]

Two similar remarks made in the vernacular are less sententious in meaning as well as more homely in language. The one appears to be a reflection on the hard times that came upon traders with the war :—

"Sum oppinnis thar pak and sellis na wair."[3]

The other tersely expresses some cautious Lowlander's sense of the kilted Highlandman's hot-headedness :—

"Breikles,
Discreitles !"[4]

Besides these there are two bits of verse in Scots. One seems a fragment of some rhymed directions to young women to live strictly by rule :—

" . . . . at x se that ye dyne ;
Ye schaip yow for to sowp at vj
And in your bed ye pass at ix.
Se that ye lif into this lyne
Gif ye will weile esposit be :
Than sall the masteris of medicyne
Get litill gude for . . . ."[5]

The other sets forth how to find Easter-day by the use of a dominical letter :—

"Marche, eftir the first T.,
Luke the pryme whenevir it be.

[1] Liber Responsionum, 1545–1561, folio 1.
[2] Same vol., folio 666.
[3] Folio 97.
[4] Folio 1.
[5] On reverse of fly-leaf.

The thrid Sonday, I wis;
Evirmair Pasche day is;
And gif on Sonday fallis the pryme,
Tell it for ane. Sa sayis the ryme."[1]

But the most curious of these extraneous things found in the MS. is a letter, of which both the handwriting and the position in the sheets of the record suggest some date near 1550. It is addressed by a burgess of Haddington, one Thomas Dickson, to the director of chancery. The writer sets forth that he is heavily troubled with "ane sare leg," and cannot come East to visit his friends. He is also indebted to various creditors, and hard beset to find food for his children. He accordingly beseeches the director to send him forty shillings by bearer, and concludes thus:—"The eternal God have you in keeping; and, gif I may not get the forty shillings, send me less at your own discretion; for it stands sharp with me at this time, blessed be Jesus!"[2] There is nothing left to show whether the director of chancery responded or not to his friend's request. The note may have been mislaid by him among the official papers along with which it has been preserved. Habent sua fata libelli; and fortune makes a stroke of irony, when, in a fiscal record, from which the accounts of royal officers have been lost, it saves from destruction, through so many years, a paper so little regarded as a begging letter.
